

Dear Students, Colleagues and Friends,

When was the last time you wanted to do something but thought, "I can't do that. I have no idea how to get there or make that happen."

If that doesn't resonate, what about this one, "What am I doing here? This just absolutely is not my calling; but I don't know what my calling is and this pays the bills so I suppose I'll have a beer and do it again tomorrow."

This issue is for you. Those of you who haven't said either of those things can either go about your business or read on to see if there might be something here for you as well. As usual, your pick.

Those of you who have been long time subscribers (or in the case of past students – automatic subscribers) have figured out by now that these newsletters are not about receiving a pretty, professional-looking missive. Such is not my goal. My goal is to pass on information you will find useful, interesting or mildly amusing. I never really know if there's going to be a next edition – or if so, what it will be. (So, for those of you who are my Type-A friends, there you have it. My secret's out.) (And for those of you who are past students, yes, that is a preposition at the end of that sentence. Enjoy.) I ask myself, "Could it possibly interest or help them somehow?"

Now that you know my "secret", I'll share with you that this issue is not about what I have to say. Rather, it's about what a fellow named Neil Gaiman has to say. If you don't know the name you will know the man if you Google him. But really, his fame isn't important because what he has to say applies to all of us if we let it. My friend, Barrie, sent this to me. She's not in "sustainability" per se but she thought what he had to say could help those of us who were recipients be brave, grow and take the next step toward the mountain.

I hope the same for you. www.youtube.com/watch?v=plWexCID-kA

Be brave.

Take the next step,

Margo
